Births Deaths and Marriages Registry Offices
(Bureau of Vital Statistics) are at the forefront of social management and vital record keeping.

Everyone is touched by the vital record management function of a Registry Office, whether as a result of their own family genealogy (birth records, marriage records or death records) or through the decisions made as a result of the accumulated population statistics.

No matter the use, the need for accurate, reliable and efficient keeping of vital records in the Registry is essential both in fulfilling legislative obligations as well as minimizing the budgets associated with running the Registry. New social and government considerations including National Security also increase the demand for delivering new and relevant information services such that BDM systems must be flexible and powerful to suit the constantly changing needs of the Office.

As a cornerstone of "proof of identity", vital records and the verification of certificate information are a vital part of the framework of our society and our security.

A centralised, secure, fast, reliable, efficient, feature rich and cost-effective software solution is essential to deliver services.
